

ADVERTISEMENT

CALIFORNIA

Millions affected as schools across U.S close to combat spread of coronavirus

Students hug as they are let out of school at Hamilton High School in Los Angeles. LAUSD announced that schools will be closed due to the Coronavirus. (Gary Coronado/Los Angeles Times)

By HOWARD BLUME, HAILEY BRANSON-POTTS, RUBEN VIVES, ALEX WIGGLESWORTH

MARCH 14, 2020 | 3 AM

Major school districts throughout California, including Los Angeles Unified, announced shutdowns Friday, joining at least 12 states that have ordered complete closures amid escalating attempts to slow the spread of the coronavirus.

Los Angeles, the nation's second-largest school system, will shut down its 900 campuses serving more than 670,000 students beginning Monday.

The closure initially is scheduled to last two weeks, but a firm reopen date will depend on the status of the outbreak, which President Trump declared a national emergency on Friday.

"The public health crisis created by the coronavirus is not something any of us could have reasonably expected to happen, and we are in uncharted waters as we work to prevent the spread of the illness," LAUSD Supt. Austin Beutner said Friday while announcing the closures.

ADVERTISING

Do you recall seeing an ad for Cole Haan recently?

Yes

No

I don't know

Next

1/3

Ads by Teads

Los Angeles Times

LOG IN

Blake Anderson, left, a freshman, walks with his father Oree Anderson, as school is let out at Hamilton High School in Los Angeles. LAUSD announced that schools will be closed due to the Coronavirus. (Gary Coronado/Los Angeles Times)

California's five largest public school districts, including Fresno, Long Beach and Elk Grove, will pause classes. Although the state Department of Education does not have an exact number, closures will be in effect Monday at more than 100 districts and will affect more than 2 million students. All schools are closed in the counties of Marin, Monterey, Sacramento, Santa Barbara, Santa Clara, Solano and Ventura. This comes on top of widespread actions by most state universities, including most of the University of California, to cancel in-person classes and move to online learning.

Friday afternoon the influential California Teachers Assn. called on Gov. Gavin Newsom to close all state schools.

Catholic schools in Los Angeles, Ventura and Santa Barbara counties will close on Tuesday and nearly 75,000 students will shift to remote learning through at least March 31, the Archdiocese of Los Angeles announced.

INDICATION

AUBAGIO® (teriflunomide) is a prescription medicine used to treat relapsing forms of multiple sclerosis (MS), to include clinically isolated syndrome, relapsing-remitting disease, and active secondary progressive disease, in adults.

IMPORTANT SAFETY INFORMATION

Do not take AUBAGIO if you have severe liver problems, are pregnant or of childbearing potential and not using effective birth control, have had an allergic reaction to AUBAGIO or leflunomide, or are taking a medicine called leflunomide for rheumatoid arthritis.

Please see Important Safety Information toward the end of this video.

SPONSORED CONTENT

WATCH PEOPLE SAY WHY THEY SWITCHED RELAPSING MS TREATMENTS

By Sanofi

They reached a turning point. People share why they switched relapsing MS treatment. What will your turning point be?

At least 12 states — Alabama, Illinois, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, New Mexico, Ohio, Oregon, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin — ordered all schools closed.

Officials throughout the country have struggled with the monumental decision to upend the routines of millions of families and seriously disrupt the education system at a critical time of instruction as schools give annual achievement tests, older students take Advanced Placement exams, high schoolers visit colleges and seniors complete credits needed for graduation.

The closures could disproportionately affect children from poor and low-income families, many of whom receive their weekday breakfast and lunch and, in some cases, dinner on campus. LAUSD enrolls about half a million students in kindergarten through 12th grade, some 80% of whom rely on free or reduced-price lunches and 18,000 of whom are homeless.

Students leave John C. Fremont High School in Los Angeles at the end of the school day on Friday, Mar. 13, 2020. LAUSD announced it will shut down beginning Monday. (Luis Sinco/Los Angeles Times)

Parents rely on schools to provide childcare while they work — including first responders, nurses, doctors and other emergency personnel who are likely to be needed to deal with the community medical crisis.

“California has now entered a critical new phase in the fight to stop the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic,” said a joint statement by Beutner and Cindy Marten, superintendent of the San Diego Unified School District. “There is evidence the virus is already present in the communities we serve, and our efforts now must be aimed at preventing its spread. We believe closing the state's two largest school districts will make an important contribution to this effort."

Crystal Ellis, 34, heard the news before she went to pick up her son at Raymond Elementary School in South Los Angeles as a light drizzle came down. She held a white package and an iPad that the school asked her to pick up for her 11-year-old son.

"It's a little bit scary because I don't know what's going to happen," she said.

ADVERTISEMENT

School leaders throughout the country say they are acting with an abundance of caution although the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has advised that short-term school closures of two to four weeks may not do much to stem the spread of the disease.

Her head shaking as she spoke Friday, veteran L.A. school board member and former state lawmaker Jackie Goldberg called the closures "probably the most difficult decision any of us on the board have had to make because it affects so many people, and it affects so many children, and it affects so many people who have jobs that they are fearful of losing if they have childcare issues."

A key element of the Los Angeles plan for the closures is to open 40 family resource centers throughout the vast school system. The centers, which will open Wednesday, will provide childcare, packaged meals and educational activities.

As a public health precaution, all center visitors will have their temperatures taken with forehead thermometers upon arrival, and all students will be directed to wash their hands. The centers will be staffed by district employees, who will receive extra pay, on a voluntary basis.

ADVERTISEMENT

The facilities will operate from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and likely will be located at schools, Beutner said. He added that he hoped local transit agencies would provide free rides to and from the centers, but nothing has been worked out so far.

Beutner said a list of the centers will be made public before Monday.

In addition, the Los Angeles district will offer televised and online lessons in an attempt to help families. School district employees will continue to be paid, even if not directly involved in working with students.

The extraordinary closures are the first of this scale since the 1994 Northridge earthquake. All of the district's then 640 schools were closed immediately following the temblor, and most reopened eight days later. About a dozen campuses were closed for three weeks, and three campuses were closed for six weeks.

ADVERTISEMENT

The move to close schools amid the coronavirus outbreak came amid mounting pressure for LAUSD to take more aggressive action.

Teachers union president Alex Caputo-Pearl, who called on the district Thursday night to shutter campuses, said schools were being forced to “choose between two unacceptable alternatives, which is choosing to keep schools open in a dangerous situation or close schools and fear for the lack of a social safety net that schools end up having to provide too much.”

A central challenge faced by the district is the continuation of academic work during a shutdown that could last for two weeks or more.

L.A. Unified is trying to address three hurdles: a lack of broadband access for students, a lack of computers at home, and teachers and students who are underprepared to switch to a non-classroom format.

ADVERTISEMENT

In a Monday letter to Gov. Gavin Newsom, Beutner said that the district has about 330,000 computers available for 480,000 K-12 students. The district, Beutner said, would “need an additional 150,000 devices to make sure all students can continue to learn if their schools are closed.”

However, it isn’t clear that all these computers could be sent home with students or that they are the correct devices for the task at hand. An iPad without a keyboard, for example, would work for a student film project, but not so well for an essay.

Beutner has requested $50 million from the state for additional computers, but no immediate relief appears to be in sight. In the meantime, he has authorized the use of $10 million to purchase 50,000 additional devices, which should be available in several days, he said.

Beutner had the power to authorize this purchase, without going through the normal, lengthy bidding process, by virtue of emergency powers granted this week by the Board of Education.

ADVERTISEMENT

In the meantime, the plan was for schools to distribute computer devices Friday for students who need them.

But having computers is only part of the challenge. Many families lack the broadband access needed to connect online to lessons and assignments. Beutner on Monday wrote to local carriers requesting that they place free hotspots in low-income communities.

Charter Communications announced that, beginning Monday, it will offer 60 days of free Spectrum broadband and Wi-Fi access to households with K-12 or college students who do not already have a Spectrum broadband subscription. Installation fees will be waived for these households and the company also plans to open Wi-Fi hotspots across its footprint for public use, as of Monday.

In Los Angeles, some parents reacted to the news of the closures with apprehension.

ADVERTISEMENT

At a South L.A. laundromat on Friday, Adela Hernandez, 35, wondered how she and her husband would manage the education of their 10-year-old son, who attends West Vernon Elementary School, at home, where they don't have the internet.

"Maybe I'll ask the neighbor if they can give us access," she said. "I'll have to maybe pay her."

Times were already getting hard. Hernandez said she's bringing in less money working at a clothing company because her hours at work were recently slashed.

Outside Augustus Hawkins High School in South L.A., Nancy Ramirez, 34, said she worries how her 18- and 11-year-old daughters will keep up because they do not have computers at home. Her older daughter, who declined to give her name, said she planned to use her cellphone to do her school work or go to a relative's house to use the internet.

ADVERTISEMENT

Ramirez, who drives for Uber during the day, said she will probably stay with her daughters during the day and drive at night. Her ex-husband helps care for the girls, but she fears he could lose his job because he works for a China-based company.

"We gotta work," she said. "We need money to pay rent and bills."

CALIFORNIA

EDUCATION

COVID-19 PANDEMIC

The stories shaping California

Get up to speed with our Essential California newsletter, sent six days a week.

Enter Email Address

SIGN ME UP

You may occasionally receive promotional content from the Los Angeles Times.

Howard Blume

Twitter Instagram Email Facebook

Howard Blume covers education for the Los Angeles Times. He's won the top investigative reporting prize from the L.A. Press Club and print Journalist of the Year from the L.A. Society of Professional Journalists chapter. He co-hosts "Deadline L.A." on KPFK, which the press club named best radio public affairs show in 2010. He teaches tap dancing and has two superior daughters.

Hailey Branson-Potts

Twitter Instagram Email Facebook

Hailey Branson-Potts is a Metro reporter for the Los Angeles Times who joined the newspaper in 2011. She grew up in the small town of Perry, Okla., and graduated from the University of Oklahoma.

Ruben Vives

Twitter Instagram Email Facebook

Ruben Vives is a general assignment reporter for the Los Angeles Times. A native of Guatemala, he got his start in journalism by writing for The Times' Homicide Report in 2007. He helped uncover the financial corruption in the city of Bell that led to criminal charges against eight city officials. The 2010 investigative series won the Pulitzer Prize for public service and other prestigious awards.

Alex Wigglesworth

Twitter Instagram Email Facebook

Alex Wigglesworth is a staff writer at the Los Angeles Times.

SUBSCRIBERS ARE READING

OPINION

Op-Ed: Democrats have a secret weapon to thwart a rapid Ginsburg replacement. They should use it

COMPANY TOWN

L.A. Times shaken by a summer of turmoil and scandals

BUSINESS

'Tsunami' of hotel closures is coming, experts warn

TELEVISION

The first ever virtual Emmys were the perfect awards for our times

Around the Web

Ads by Revcontent

The Horrifying Truth About CBD

TOMMY CHONG

Eureka, California Launches New Policy For Cars Used Less Than 49 Miles/Day

COMPARISONS.ORG

The States Where Americans Don't Want To Live Anymore

MONEYWISE.COM

California: Say Bye To Expensive Solar Panels If You Own A Home in Eureka

ENERGYBILLCRUNCHER

Chiropractors Baffled: "30 Second" Stretch Relieves Years Of Back Pain (Watch)

WEEKLYPENNY.COM

One Simple Method To Keep Your Blood Sugar Below 100

WEEKLYPENNY.COM

CORONAVIRUS AND PANDEMIC >

How is Little Saigon curbing coronavirus? By respecting elders, authorities and masks

'Tsunami' of hotel closures is coming, experts warn

Defying predictions of disaster, Africa's coronavirus response is receiving praise

Sweden has escaped a second coronavirus wave so far. The question is why

No place to study, hunger and inadequate computers hurt Eastside and South L.A. students

Cases statewide »

792,175
confirmed

15,143
deaths

As of September 22, 2:44 p.m. Pacific

ADVERTISEMENT

LATEST CALIFORNIA >

CALIFORNIA

A Labor Day-fueled coronavirus surge? 'Troubling trend,' but no clear evidence

4 minutes ago

CALIFORNIA

Program to house homeless people in hotels is ending after falling short of goal

1 hour ago

CALIFORNIA

Orange County could be set for wider reopening amid improved COVID-19 numbers

1 hour ago

CALIFORNIA

Nail salons can reopen statewide; L.A. County yet to set timing

2 hours ago

CALIFORNIA

2 Marines at Camp Pendleton charged in federal drug bust tied to OD of fellow Marine

Sep. 22, 2020

ADVERTISEMENT

Get our free Coronavirus Today newsletter

Sign up for the latest news, best stories and what they mean for you, plus answers to your questions.

Enter Email Address

SIGN ME UP

You may occasionally receive promotional content from the Los Angeles Times.

ADVERTISEMENT

Subscribe for unlimited access

Follow Us

